The Chicago Fire.

The old raying that "fire is a very good servent, but a very bad master," was never more truly exemplified than in the results of the terrible conflagration that has recently laid one fourth of the fair city of Chicago in ashes, and entailed a heavy loss of life. The teta:ls of this calamity, as outlined in the telegraphic reports that have reached us, are truly terrible. Two hundred millions of dollars will scarcely cover the amount of the losses; one hundred and fifty thousand people are house less, ten thousand business men will be compelled to make assignments, and one hundred thousand laborers have been thrown out of employment. The shock has been felt throughout the entire length and breadth of the country and the universal acknowledgment goes forth that the Fire King is the master of the world. It is the most terrible calamity of the kind that has ever been known in the history of this continent, and Gol grant that we may never have a repetition of it.

History Repeating Itself.

Persons who are accustomed to look at history as a pageant, may think it a desecration to present it in a homely shape, robbed of its gorgeons are escrics. They will feel off nded at finding the romance of history irreverently demolished for the sake of mere reality. To such we would not man ; T. C. Fuller, Fayetteville ; A. A. commend a work now in print, entitled McKoy, Clinton; H. C. Wall, Rocking-"The Comic History of England"; but we ham; A. S. Norment, Lumberton. J. D. can, and do, to those who will not object McIver, Carthage; J. W. Ellis, Whiteville. to seeing many a mock heroism stripped of its pretensions, many a political hypocrisy divested of its mask, and much socalled patriotism exposed in its hollowne-s,-and all through the agency of a h rmless satire and a very genial humor, aimed though they be at some of the most time-honored traditions of the past.

But our present object, in making a few national debt. extracts from the book in question, is simply to show how strikingly events and people of former centuries, consecrated by the sober muse of history, appear in analogy with people and events of the present degenerate days, when touched by the hand of satirical truth.

Thus, the following description of Croma portraiture of the present American Congress: "The new Parliament was a miscellaneous collection of impostors and scamps, with a slight mixture of honest men, -but the e were too few to make the thing respectable." And the "Protectors" of liberty and equality, as described by the author, is about that of the modern Radical party, with Grant at its head, viz : "They (the poorle) were all equally bound to show subservience to him, and, as to say or think anything that would not be burned.

With regard to the Star-Chamber Court, which had its origin in the reign of Henry VII, no are facetiously told that the word "Star" was applied to the Court, because, within its walls, justice (so-called) was administered in a "twinkling"-all of which is forcibly suggestive of Judge Bond's Court, especially when one observes how men, who, admittedly never were on a Ku Klux raid or in a Ku Klux meeting, have been sen enced by that model jurist to two years incarceration in a common jail "It ought," says the author, "with as much reason, be suggested that the name had reference to the constellation of legal talent of which the tribunal was comthe Court in Raleigh, with its sparkling ple of the stricken section and hope for posed:" which still more vividly presents array of forensic ability, in the persons of Sar-buck, Lu k, etc., etc.

The subjoined description of Titus Oates will do very well for some of the spies, Murphy with having robbed the U. S. sensationalists and informers, who have Government of $100,000, and says that he appeared before the Outrage Committee at Washington : "The stories got up by him were of the most elaborately absurd President Grant, the Chief Executive of cattle consisted mostly of Devons and readers.
